Few things stir the nostalgic soul like a picture of how things were. The ability to capture better days on canvas is nothing less than a gift to those of us who treasure yesterday. For years, Mark Millet has scoured the countryside, cataloguing landmarks, capturing moments in time, and bringing to life the memories that don't need to be lived without. The places taken for granted growing up find their place once again in the homes and garages of the grateful. Watercolor is the medium, and anything that mattered (and still does) is the subject of his craft.

Influenced by artist parents, Mark was on his way as an illustrator of comic book heroes and WWII planes by the age of 12. At about this time, while on his paper route, he happened upon a 283 Chevrolet short block sitting by the curb. Intrigued by the stagger of the pistons in the bores, Mark became a car guy.
