To Whom It May Concern,

For over thirty years I've owned and operated a very successful business based exclusively on good, old-fashioned face-to-face sales. Recently, more and more prospective customers began asking to see my website. They asked often enough that I decided I did need one.

I don't know much about websites, nor did I want to, but I do have some very definite ideas about my business and how I want to present it.

Dana Greyson Write Stuff Websites listened to what I had to say and how I say it. She wanted to make sure the website she designed for me sounded like me, and was as clear in selling my business plan as I am when I do it in person. And, she stuck with it until she was sure I was completely satisfied with the results.

She also looked for ways the website could save me work, like have the program description and a sample brochure available for a potential customer to download. That helps me to quickly address those issues when they arise, and saves me the trouble of sending materials in the mail, that take days to be seen which I had to do many times.

And, Dana also was a real hawk when it came to making sure my website was consistent all the way through, because when things go from face-to-face to in-writing, that consistency and accuracy become much more critical. And, I know if I make changes to my business policies, Dana will make sure my website reflects them immediately, exactly the way I wanted.

If you are looking for someone you can trust to make the website stuff simple and painless for you, and meet your business needs, Dana with Write Stuff Websites you can count on to get it right, and do it well. I recommend her without hesitation.
