We live in a racist society. In the United States, a Hispanic woman is paid 67% of the salary of a white male for the exact same position. Prejudice and racism is also evident in our criminal justice system and in our education system. On Long Island, many High Schools in predominantly white, affluent neighborhoods have graduation rates in the upper nineties, while some High Schools on Long Island in predominately minority neighborhoods have graduation rates below sixty percent. In one city in this country, 10% of the population is African American and over 50% of the prisoners in their jails are African American. Prejudice can be seen in the actions of our everyday life like security following black youth in stores, by people refusing to get on planes with Arab looking passengers, by asking Hispanics (Latino, Latina) if they have a green card, and by the stories and jokes that are told in all white company that degrade minorities.

The white culture in this country dominates all other cultures through the use of their power and money. This systemic power causes racism. Many white people are sensitive to the plight of minorities, but are unaware that they are part of the problem. My own personal experiences and my knowledge of the Episcopal Church indicate that we have at times been both a help and a hindrance to eradicating racial prejudice and racism. As an institution, the Episcopal Church has at times been a contributor to systemic racism and at other times been a force against racism. For example, out of 100 diocesan employment officers there are only two minorities. At St. John's we are committed to racial reconciliation. Please join us by watching the movie, “Hidden Figures” if you missed it on Tuesday. Please attend the upcoming event by the racial reconciliation committee on the proper procedure to follow if you get pulled over by the police.

In Christ's love,
Fr. Duncan
